Senator Clark's Five Weeks in Europe a Most Expensive Tour.

When United States Senator W. A. Clark, the multi-millionaire from Montana, went to Europe a few weeks ago, he did not expect to establish a record for making the most expensive foreign tour.

When he landed from the majestic yesterday he found that his brief absence from this country had cost him, or would cost him in the near future, about $5,000,000—nearly $1,000,000 a week for the time spent abroad.

Senator Clark has built the main portion of the San Pedro, Los Angeles and Salt Lake Railroad.

At every turn in the transaction he was fought bitterly by Edward H. Harriman, who even invoked the aid of the courts and the presence of armed troops. The Senator triumphed finally and went to Europe.

In his absence Harriman and George Gould formed a combination. Now they have the Senator in a corner. Unless he can get a connection independent of the Goulds and Harriman combine his road will be unable to handle competitive business.

The Short Line is building into Los Angeles from Salt Lake, which will enable the combine to freeze out the Clark road.

To prevent the formation of another competitive line into Utah and Southern California, George Gould has secured control of the Colorado Midland, and has joined the group which formed the Northern Securities Company, so that most powerful of all railroad combines is now back of Harriman and Gould against Senator Clark.

To get an outlet, Senator Clark will be forced to build another 1,000 miles of expensive railroad, the minimum cost of which will be not less than $5,000,000. Senator Clark has a card up his sleeve, however. He will go to Washington for the reopening of Congress, Monday, and as a member of the Senate can inaugurate a hot fight to prevent the merger of the roads which the Northern Securities Company seeks to accomplish.

The most significant action of the giant railroad trust, as indicating that it really fears the law of Minnesota, is the withdrawal of Jacob H. Schiff from the Board of Directors of the Great Northern.

Mr. Schiff is in the Northern Pacific directorate, and his retirement from the Great Northern may be followed by many other changes, including Hill and Harriman.

RECEIVED STOLEN DOGS.

James A. Moore's Cocker Spaniel Found in Saratoga.

SARATOGA, N. Y., Nov. 22.—Michael Cleary, coachman for James A. Moore, of New York City and Saratoga Springs, was brought here by Detective Hennessy last night to answer charges of grand larceny. One was preferred by G. C. Hamill, of Hartford, Conn., a Saratoga summer cottager, and the other by Frank L. Eaton, of this place. Cleary was accused of stealing Hamill's prize-winning dog, valued at $60, and Eaton's canine, worth $40. Cleary, who arrived here before Police Judge J. J. Delaney this morning, pleaded

After the Thanksgiving Turkey.

NOW in the cold and wintry sun the turkey's bones are bleaching. And Willie, having gormandized, for medicine is reaching. The kitchen is a cluttered place. Where cook cleans up the bliss muss. And we are looking forward to A very Merry Christmas.

Yes, Thanksgiving Day is over and gone. Let us hope that you gave thanks in plenty, ate a big dinner and to-day are at peace with the world. For then you will be more in condition to appreciate benefits to come. No one is so ready for a feast of reason as he who has just given, his "inner man" a gastronomical treat, because eating and reading go together as well as plum pudding and hard sauce, or raisins and nuts. They put one in good spirits.

Speaking of spirits, have you heard of the latest, and, perhaps, the most astonishing proof of their existence? It comes from no less a personage than the great French playwright Victorien Sardou. The famous dramatist has always dabbled in the occult, but now he comes forward with the most extraordinary series of proofs that "spiritism" is not a fraud that has ever been presented. Nobody—that is, nobody of prominence—except a Frenchman would dare submit such evidence in good faith or expect to be believed. For the French are a daring race.

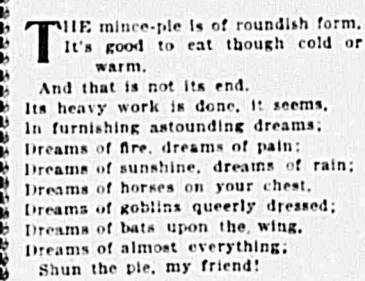

TODAY for breakfast Turkey stew. And Turkey hash for lunch. And Turkey soup for dinner's hour. Then Turkey cold we munch. Oh Turkey, Turkey, all the time of festal merriment. Give thanks the Turkey'll all be gone Ere dawns the sun of Monday!

That's the only disagreeable thing about Thanksgiving, unless your family had such a glorious appetite that it ate every bit of the bird. But, as we said, the French are a daring people. Take, for instance, the chap who has had the courage to design women's costumes as they will be worn twenty-five years hence. He hasn't done so badly, however, as you will doubtless agree when you see what they are like. These costumes, in four colors, will be presented to your view in a very attractive form on Sunday. If you are a woman, and they catch your eye, you have full permission to copy them and thus be twenty-five years ahead of the fashion. There's a chance for you.

THE newboy who, on yesterday, enjoyed a gorgeous dinner. Is thankful as the sport who on "Young" Corbett was a winner. But oh, of all the thankful crowd. The most, there's no disputing, is the turkey who escaped the plate. To-day, with thanks he's so elated That he is nearly busting!

Pretty thankful is the mottled bird, but more thanksgiving doubtless took place in the family circle of the head underbills yesterday than almost anywhere else in New York (except in other houses where a little bird had recently come to bless them). The Vanderbilt boy baby of last Sunday means a lot, as you must know. For he is no ordinary baby. He was born with a whole diamond mine in his little mouth. You'd think naturally that such a child, who is destined some day to lead the fortunes, and fortune of his family, would be pampered to a dreadful degree. But we are all thankful to learn that the common sense is to be introduced into his bringing-up as in the care of few babies. In fact, a careful study of the baby clothes that are to keep his little body warm will be a liberal education to many a mother. They are simplicity itself, and it will be a treat to see them. Of course, you can't go to the Vanderbilt house and ask Mrs. Vanderbilt to show them to you. The treat has been provided otherwise, and will be given to you and hundreds of thousands of mothers on Sunday next.

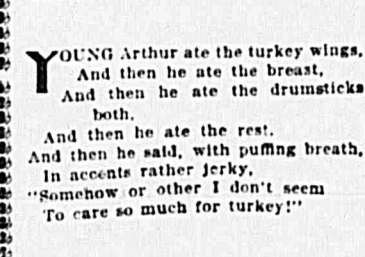

THE mince-pie is of roundish form. It's good to eat though cold or warm. And that is not its end. Its heavy work is done, it seems, in furnishing astounding dreams. Dreams of fire, dreams of pain; Dreams of sunshine, dreams of rain; Dreams of horses on your chest; Dreams of gobins quietly dressed; Dreams of bats upon the wing; Dreams of almost everything; Shun the pie, my friend!

A little late with our advice, eh? Well, Thanksgiving comes but once a year, so if you're a little bit late to the had from the succulent pie today, don't be cast down. It's no more to be a slave to the pie than a slave to a woman. At least, some people think so, among them the famous French satirist and analyst of feminine nature, MAX O'RELL. On Sunday, around to a pitch almost approaching rebellion, he answers the famous English woman, Mme. Sarah Grand, whose arraignment of the male sex, which she devotedly calls "mere man," was published in the Sunday World a few weeks ago. M. O'Rell not only answers Mme. Grand in his usual biting style, but goes her one better, and says some things about her own sex that will puzzle her to refute.

O H, yesterday morning the plum pudding looked Like a ball or a bounding balloon. But now 'tis bereft Of its roundness, and left Like the slab of a thin new moon.

Yes, we didn't do a thing to the plum pudding yesterday. We treated it in fact, about the way they treat actors in Augustus Thomas's new play, "Colorado," which Miss Layelia Hart and Artie T. E. Powers saw, the other night, at Wallack's Theatre. Every one in "Colorado," according to Miss Hart's story and Mr. Powers's pictures, gets shot more or less full of holes, till the stage resembles a shambles or would, if the bullets were real. At any rate, these two have furnished a most interesting story, which will be read by you with avidity.

YOUNG Arthur ate the turkey wings. And then he ate the breast. And then he ate the drumsticks both. And then he ate the rest. And then he said, with puffing breath, In accents rather jerky, "Somehow or other I don't seem To care so much for turkey!"

Pickle Arthur! Yet not more pickle than woman! Ah, woman! You take us up only to drop us! Note the case of Miss Vivian, and will be Grant's beautiful granddaughter, who to-day furnishes us with another example of how a woman's mind and love can change. First engaged to the young man, she lifts him. Then engaged to a grocer, she dumps him. And now, she is back to her old love, and wedding bells are soon to tinkle, unless she lifts him. Who shall say? Who, shall judge whether her return to her first love's nest, after all, is a sign of fickleness, or not?

O H, let us not regret the fact That we are done thanks giving! There's lots of other reasons why We should give thanks we're living. Let's thank the sun that shines to-day Because it finds us breathing! Let's offer thanks for little ones, Although the dears be teething. Although we're broke, let's offer thanks That creditors are decent. Let's offer thanks that though the food Occurred it wasn't recent. Let's offer thanks for everything From Monday until Monday. But, most of all, that we shall have THE SUNDAY WORLD NEXT SUNDAY.

See To-morrow's Advertisement for Further Particulars.
